Assurance Statement - #3 Exception

Farrowing crates specifically designed for housing sow/gilts prior to parturition, through weaning, have been used in agriculture and research institutions for many years. The primary reasons for this is to protect the young piglets from being injured by the sow/gilt, as well as protection of personnel working in the area. We have purchased a farrowing crate for housing of a sow w/piglets from immediately post-partum through weaning, to accommodate an IACUC approved research project.

This exception to the 1996 Guide for the Care and Use of Laboratory Animals is applied to each sow in Category B: 21 swine.
