

NATIVE AMERICAN SERVING INSTITUTIONS INTERNSHIP PROGRAM

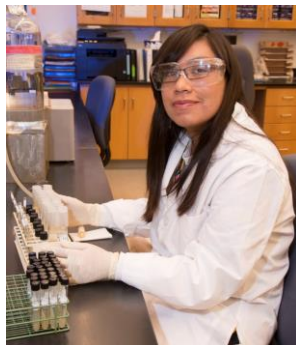

The Program

In partnership with Native American Serving Institutions (NASIs) and Tribal Colleges and Universities (TCUs), the USDA Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service (APHIS), is offering college students an 8-week summer internship experience in one of our programs. At APHIS offices throughout the country, students gain valuable practical professional experience, as well as insight about public service, and working for a Federal agency.

APHIS is the agency in the Department of Agriculture that helps United States farmers and ranchers by guarding against the entry and spread of foreign pests and diseases, as well as preventing wildlife from preying on livestock, and other agricultural resources. APHIS also helps to protect vulnerable animals under the Animal Welfare Act.

What Does an Intern Do?

Based on specific career interests and skills, accepted student interns will receive a paid work experience in one of APHIS' many programs—such as Animal Care, Plant Protection and Quarantine, Wildlife Services, Biotechnology Regulatory Services, or Veterinary Services—or in one of APHIS' support units. Interns will assist with daily operations while gaining professional experience in such areas as hands-on field work, administration, data analysis, budgeting, and accounting, communications and outreach, or other technical and scientific work related to plant and animal health. Travel and housing costs are covered by APHIS.
