Description of Information you are Requesting:

Although canine rabies vaccine adjuvant information is technically kept proprietary by manufacturers, a comparison of adverse events reported by manufacturers of an alum-based adjuvant rabies vaccine vs a non-alum-based adjuvant rabies vaccine is possible without violating trade secrets in that Pfizer publically lists aluminum hydroxide as the adjuvant component in the Defensor MSDS (also marketed as Rabdomun), and Intervet Schering-Plough has a published study indicating that the Continuum Rabies vaccine contains a non-aluminum adjuvant (Lakshmanan et al, Vet Ther 2006). Therefore, comparative data (with all of the limitations on reporting/collection/causality noted in the 2008 Frana et al postmarketing surveillance report, Vet Med Today) should be feasible with these two monovalent vaccines at minimum, and this comparison would be of great interest to the veterinary community. I therefore request the available data on adverse events reported with the two monovalent canine rabies vaccines noted above: Defensor 1 and 3, and Continuum Rabies, as summary tables if available with any analysis done by CVB, or as raw data tables as submitted by the manufacturers, veterinarians or the public. Preliminary discussion on the feasibility and acceptability of this request by APHIS has been discussed with Scott Taylor. I can provide copies of the referenced documents via e-mail if needed. Thank you very much.
