Last Modified:

This 2-week classroom and laboratory training provides collaborative and interactive learning opportunities for Federal, State, and military veterinarians through instructor-led presentations, facilitated discussions, daily clinical rounds in the animal rooms, necropsies, and a simulated foreign animal disease investigation scenario at the end of the second week.

This course trains participants in field identification skills to determine a differential diagnosis of disease in poultry and livestock foreign to the United States, and the steps to perform field investigations and correct sample submission techniques.
