

Figure 13. The LP collar on this Angora goat has slipped back out of position. If the LP collar was in this position when a coyote attacked, the collar probably would not be punctured.

Figure 14. If LP collar straps are too tight, they will cause abrasions that become infected and attract flies, as shown on this Angora goat. This problem is more common with goats than sheep. It can be avoided by checking strap tension frequently.

Specimen Label
Not For Reproduction